SDG 16: PEACE, JUSTICE AND STRONG INSTITUTIONS PROGRESS REPORT

Sustainable Development Goal 16 (SDG 16), Peace, Justice and Strong Institutions, aims to promote peaceful and inclusive societies, ensure access to justice for all, and build effective, accountable, and inclusive institutions. For higher education institutions, this goal involves protecting human rights, promoting transparent and participatory governance, strengthening ethical leadership, safeguarding children, advancing gender equality and inclusion, encouraging civic participation, maintaining safe learning environments, and building constructive partnerships with government agencies and local communities. The City College of Cagayan de Oro (CCCDO) contributes to these objectives by integrating education, institutional governance, human-rights advocacy, youth leadership, and community engagement into its conducted activities and initiatives.

This report examines CCCDO's conducted SDG 16-related activities in 2024 and 2025, highlighting the institution's progress in promoting peace, justice, inclusion, accountability, and effective governance. In 2024, the College reported twelve initiatives covering leadership development, volunteerism, children's rights, cybersecurity awareness, procurement transparency, strategic planning, presidential selection, human-rights education, and youth participation. These activities established a foundation for strengthening institutional integrity, protecting rights, and encouraging responsible participation among students, employees, and community members.

In 2025, CCCDO continued these efforts while expanding its initiatives across more institutional and community settings. Its activities included human-rights education through the Center for Human Rights Education (CHRE), child-friendly governance, student government participation, gender-sensitivity training, LGBTQIA+ inclusion, voter education, leadership development, campus safety, community consultation, and values-based peace education. These initiatives demonstrate how SDG 16 principles can be integrated into institutional processes and community-oriented programs rather than being limited to individual events.

The overall findings indicate qualitative progress from a foundation of separate leadership, governance, and rights-related activities in 2024 toward more visible institutional mechanisms and broader community engagement in 2025. Significant developments included a dedicated human-rights capacity-building workshop for 30 teaching and non-teaching personnel, recognition from the Commission on Human Rights (CHR) for establishing CHRE, continued student-government activities, and initiatives promoting inclusion, civic responsibility, safety, and peaceful community relations. Although these developments indicate strengthened implementation, the number of activities alone does not establish their long-term impact. Their significance must also be understood in terms of institutional commitment, participation, and opportunities for sustained improvement.

Executive Assessment

In 2024, CCCDO reported twelve SDG 16-aligned initiatives, assigning each an equal contribution share of 8.33% within its reporting framework. The activities were organized into four thematic areas: leadership and ethical governance (25%), justice and human-rights education (25%), institutional integrity and digital resilience (16.7%), and youth engagement and civic empowerment (33.3%). These categories demonstrate the College's efforts to address SDG 16 through leadership development, rights awareness, responsible institutional practices, and meaningful youth participation. Among the year's notable institutional milestones were the public forum for selecting the first College President, the agreement with the Commission on Human Rights Region X (CHR-X), and the launch of the Center for Human Rights Education. Together, these initiatives established a foundation for transparent governance, human-rights promotion, and institutional development.

In 2025, CCCDO sustained these priorities and extended their application through additional training programs, governance processes, inclusion initiatives, and community partnerships. CHR-X and CCCDO conducted a two-day human-rights capacity-building workshop for 30 teaching and non-teaching personnel, strengthening employees' awareness of human rights and their responsibilities in an educational institution. The College also received recognition from the Commission on Human Rights for establishing CHRE, highlighting its commitment to making human-rights education a more visible component of institutional practice.

Other conducted activities further broadened CCCDO's SDG 16 contributions. These included the Central Student Government's first regular meeting, child-friendly barangay validation, gender-sensitivity training, Take Pride 2025, Mission 626 leadership development, voter education, community consultation, an earthquake drill, and peace-and-values education. Collectively, these activities addressed student participation, inclusive governance, civic responsibility, disaster preparedness, and the promotion of peaceful and respectful relationships within the College and its partner communities.

The comparison between the two years suggests continuity accompanied by deeper institutionalization and broader application. In 2024, the College's efforts were reflected in specific activities, formal agreements, and the establishment of human-rights education initiatives. In 2025, CHRE training and recognition, continuing student-government processes, inclusion-focused programs, and public-service partnerships made these commitments more visible across different areas of institutional life.

This progress matters because peace, justice, and strong institutions depend not only on formal policies and organizational structures but also on how these principles are practiced daily. By conducting activities that promote human-rights awareness, transparent governance, youth participation, gender sensitivity, inclusion, safety, and community cooperation, CCCDO helps create an educational environment where rights are respected, responsibilities are understood, and participation is encouraged. Sustaining these efforts through regular programs, institutional policies, documented outcomes, and continuing partnerships will be essential to strengthening the College's long-term contribution to SDG 16.

Key Findings

- CCCDO's 2024 report lists twelve SDG 16 initiatives, with each assigned 8.33% of the report's stated contribution distribution.
- The 2024 portfolio emphasized four reported groupings: youth engagement and civic empowerment, leadership and ethical governance, justice and human-rights education, and institutional integrity and digital resilience.
- The 2025 report presents a more detailed set of institutional and community-facing practices, including a human-rights workshop for 30 personnel and formal recognition of the Center for Human Rights Education.
- The 2025 narrative extends the inclusion dimension through Take Pride 2025 and gender-sensitivity training, and strengthens participatory activity through student government, voter education, focus groups, and child-friendly governance work.
- Participation counts for selected 2025 activities include 30 personnel in the human-rights workshop, more than 50 student leaders in a suicide-prevention session, and 128 in-person plus 90 online delegates for the APNIEVE conference. These figures refer to different events and groups and should be read separately.
- The most defensible characterization of 2024–2025 change is a broadening and institutionalization of documented activities, rather than a single percentage increase in peace, justice, or governance outcomes.

Institutional Context and SDG 16 Alignment

SDG 16 is relevant to higher education because colleges operate as learning communities and as institutions that make decisions, manage resources, maintain safety, engage stakeholders, and interact with public agencies. Its principles can be reflected in transparent selection processes, student representation, human-rights instruction, protection of children, fair treatment in the workplace, responsible use of technology, and open channels for civic participation.

CCCDO's 2024 initiatives connect with SDG 16 targets related to access to justice and human rights (including targets 16.3 and 16.a), accountable and transparent institutions (16.5 and 16.6), public access to information and digital safety (16.10), and inclusive, participatory decision-making (16.7). The 2025 portfolio continues these themes and makes the connections more visible through rights education, CHRE activities, child-friendly validation, community consultation, student governance, and institutional partnerships.

The analysis distinguishes between a documented initiative and a demonstrated outcome. Events, partnerships, institutional recognition, and participation figures provide evidence of implementation and organizational commitment. The broader social outcomes associated with SDG 16—including stronger trust, reduced discrimination, greater accountability, and sustained access to justice—represent the intended contributions of these activities.

2024 Baseline: Governance, Human Rights, and Youth Participation

Leadership and ethical governance

The 2024 report records Lead-Their-Ship: Student Capacity Building Workshop, the Ready to Serve Volunteerism Program, and the Public Forum for the College President as initiatives supporting ethical leadership, civic responsibility, and participatory governance. The public forum on October 25, 2024, was identified as a transparent and consultative process for selecting the first College President. Together, the initiatives connected leadership with service and institutional accountability rather than treating leadership as authority alone.

Participatory leadership strengthens the legitimacy of decisions because affected groups can see that selection and representation involve consultation. Student officer workshops and volunteerism activities also give students experience in responsibility, decision-making, and service before they move into wider professional and civic roles.

Justice and human-rights education

The 2024 report identifies the COLEGA National Children's Rights Training, the December 2 Memorandum of Agreement with the Commission on Human Rights Region X (CHR-X), and the December launch of the Center for Human Rights Education. The report presents the CHRE as an institutional structure for promoting human-rights education and community partnership. It also records PYLP 2024, which emphasized leadership and intercultural dialogue, as well as youth forums that linked responsible citizenship to community life.

Human-rights education helps learners and employees understand rights, responsibilities, and the principles that guide fair treatment. The CHR-X partnership and CHRE launch are especially important because they establish a recognizable institutional channel through which rights-based learning can be organized and connected with the community.

Institutional integrity and digital resilience

Cyberbayanihan 3.0, the National Procurement Summit (PICPA), and FSDS strategic planning broadened the 2024 report beyond student leadership and rights education. Cyberbayanihan addressed digital safety and institutional resilience, procurement discussions highlighted transparency and responsible governance, and strategic planning connected institutional priorities with accountability and alignment.

Strong institutions rely on trustworthy processes, responsible resource management, and safe information practices. Digital safety awareness and transparent procurement are complementary elements of integrity because they concern how institutions protect information, manage resources, and sustain public confidence.

Youth engagement and civic empowerment

The Philippine Youth Leadership Program, the Bagong Pilipinas Youth Forum, and the Empowering Youth Through Health and Leadership Forum formed part of the 2024 youth-focused portfolio. The source groups youth engagement and civic empowerment as 33.3% of the thematic contribution distribution, the largest reported grouping. The forums and leadership exchange provided settings for dialogue, service values, cultural understanding, and participation in public issues.

Inclusive institutions depend on people who can contribute to decision-making and understand their civic responsibilities. Youth forums and leadership programs create opportunities for young people to practice dialogue, consider public concerns, and build skills that support constructive participation in society.

2025 Progress: Institutionalization and Broader Community Practice

Human-rights education and the Center for Human Rights Education

On February 13–14, 2025, CCCDO and CHR Region X conducted a two-day capacity-building workshop for 30 teaching and non-teaching personnel. The sessions covered the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Gender and Development, gender-based sexual harassment, and the COLEGA manual for teaching individual rights. Participants also discussed how human-rights learning could be integrated into academic programs and how personnel should respond to rights-related cases.

In September 2025, the Commission on Human Rights commended CCCDO for establishing CHRE. This recognition reinforced the College's reported status as the first local college in Mindanao to establish such a center. Compared with 2024, when the MOA and launch formed the institutional foundation, the 2025 workshop and commendation show a next stage of activity: personnel development and recognition of the center's role.

The shift from formal establishment to training and recognition suggests a more operational human-rights function. A dedicated center can help sustain rights-based education beyond isolated events, while training provides personnel with a shared reference point for addressing dignity, discrimination, child protection, and workplace conduct.

Participatory governance and student leadership

Student leadership remained visible in 2025. The Central Student Government's oath-taking ceremony, administered by the City Mayor on November 4, 2024 and reported in 2025, recognized student leaders as representatives. On September 23, 2025, the CSG held its first regular meeting of the academic year and reiterated commitments to integrity, transparency, accountability, service, and a student-centered campus.

The year's leadership activities also included Mission 626: A Bridging Leadership Crash Course on April 26–27, bringing together volunteers, aspiring student council and CSG officers, leaders from other higher education institutions, and barangay Sangguniang Kabataan officials. The planned Executive Leadership Course for barangay officials, discussed by CCCDO, DILG, and the local GAD Office on July 23, represents inter-agency planning rather than evidence of a completed course.

The 2024 public forum established a prominent model of consultative institutional leadership; the 2025 student-government and leadership activities show continued engagement at student and community levels. These settings help participants learn that accountable leadership involves representation, listening, collaboration, and transparent service.

Child protection, inclusion, and safe spaces

From February 3–7, 2025, the Director of CHRE participated as a validator in the Oro Kasanag Awards–Search for Child-Friendly Barangay, alongside local government, police, and civil-society representatives. The assessment considered children's rights to survival, participation, development, and protection. CCCDO's contribution connected academic and rights-related expertise with local governance assessment.

Take Pride 2025, conducted in June and recognized as the Most Outstanding City-Wide Project for Social Involvement at the Oro Youth Awards–KASADYA Culminating Program in September, promoted LGBTQIA+ visibility, inclusive education, solidarity, and safe spaces. CCCDO also partnered with the Philippine Commission on Women for workplace gender-sensitivity training on March 18, 2025, addressing bias, stereotypes, gender-fair communication, and inclusive workplace practices.

Rights and justice are meaningful when institutions protect people from exclusion and help their concerns be considered in public and campus life. Child-friendly assessment connects rights principles with local services, while gender sensitivity and safe-space initiatives make inclusion more visible in day-to-day institutional culture.

Civic participation, voter education, and community consultation

The 2025 source lists voter education on March 7, a focus group discussion for KUMILOS on April 5, a collaborative focus group discussion on participatory governance, and participation in the LGU Pasigarbo Teen Center evaluation on April 25. These activities place civic participation in practical contexts: understanding electoral processes, creating avenues for community voices, and contributing to youth-related assessment.

Participatory institutions are strengthened when people have opportunities to understand public processes and express their experiences. Voter education supports informed civic choice, while consultations can connect institutional planning with the concerns of people affected by decisions. These activities complement the public forum and youth forums documented in 2024 by providing additional settings for participation in 2025.

Institutional capacity, partnerships, and community service

On February 7, 2025, CCCDO conducted the first phase of the Advanced Capacity Development Training for Extensionists (ACES), covering community development, participatory action research, local knowledge, project management, strategic planning, logical frameworks, and monitoring and evaluation. On March 27–28, the College participated in the first PSNEI Mindanao Conference and trainer's training through NSTP, which addressed nation-building, volunteerism, Gender and Development, disaster risk reduction, and the National Service Reserve Corps.

The 2025 report also documents a Philippine Air Force partnership, an NSTP orientation and MOA signing with the PAF 8th Air Reserve Center, and other collaborative work with government agencies, community organizations, and educational institutions. Engagement with the Technical Education Council's RITE initiative highlighted Indigenous participation and mentorship-related proposals. This work is best described as engagement and proposal activity, without attributing unreported policy decisions or completed projects to the College.

Effective institutions require personnel who can design, coordinate, deliver, and assess public-service initiatives. Partnerships allow institutions to share knowledge and responsibilities; engagement with Indigenous-related initiatives is significant when it respects local knowledge, cultural dignity, and meaningful participation in decisions affecting communities.

Peace education, ethical values, and campus safety

On October 3, 2025, the College of Education held its United Nations Celebration under the theme “Promoting Peace, Unity, and Global Partnership.” Students expressed ideas about unity and cooperation through a poster-making contest and other activities. In November, CCCDO co-presented the 3rd International Conference and 24th National Convention of APNIEVE Philippines, attended by 128 in-person delegates and 90 online participants, with discussions on generative AI, education, human values, ethics, and sustainable development.

Campus safety also remained part of the institution’s contribution. During the June 19 earthquake drill, employees, students, and guests practiced “Drop, Cover, and Hold On,” evacuation routes, the buddy system, and headcounts. The report records that the drill surfaced practical considerations in emergency procedures and evacuation route access. This is a documented preparedness activity, rather than proof of a measured reduction in risk.

Peace is reinforced through values, respectful communication, and the capacity to respond to risk. Peace education encourages students to consider compassion, cooperation, and shared responsibility; an emergency drill reflects the institutional duty to protect people and coordinate response procedures. The inclusion of these activities in 2025 broadens the SDG 16 portfolio from governance and rights into institutional culture and safety.

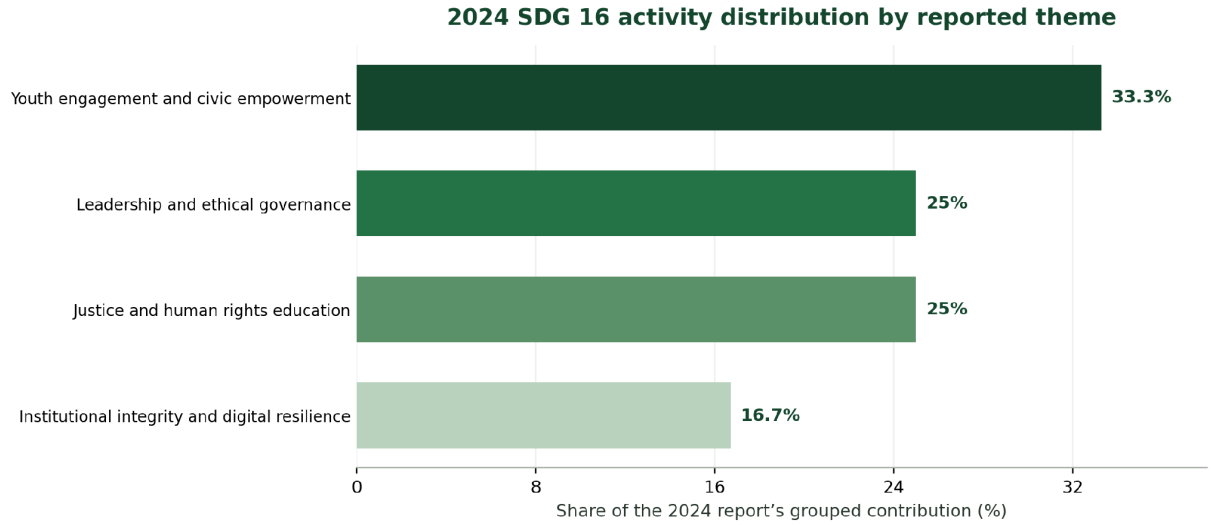

Mental-health awareness and supportive student communities

On September 19, 2025, CCCDO’s Student Welfare and Services Office Director served as a resource speaker for Initao College’s Suicide Prevention Month celebration. The online session reached more than 50 student leaders and addressed warning signs, appropriate responses to distress, and reducing the stigma attached to mental-health concerns. Although mental health is primarily associated with SDG 3, the activity also relates to SDG 16 through safe and supportive communities and responsible peer leadership.

Institutions are stronger when people feel respected and able to seek support. This activity demonstrates how public-service knowledge and student leadership can be connected across institutions, reinforcing empathy and nonjudgmental communication as part of an inclusive campus and community environment.

Interpretation: The 2024 report groups its twelve initiatives into four thematic areas. Youth engagement and civic empowerment accounts for 33.3% of the report's distribution, while leadership and ethical governance and justice and human-rights education each account for 25%. Institutional integrity and digital resilience accounts for 16.7%. The underlying list assigns 8.33% to each of the twelve initiatives. These percentages represent the reporting framework's allocation, not an independently measured score of the effectiveness of each activity. The pattern nevertheless shows that youth participation, leadership, and rights-based education were central elements of the 2024 portfolio.

Interpretation: The graph presents reported participation figures from three different kinds of 2025 activities: the human-rights capacity-building workshop involved 30 personnel; the suicide-prevention session reached more than 50 student leaders; and the APNIEVE event recorded 128 in-person delegates and 90 online participants. The figures demonstrate that the initiatives involved both internal college personnel and external or cross-institutional audiences. Since the events have different purposes and participant groups, the figures should not be added to imply a total of unique individuals or used as a direct year-on-year comparison with 2024, which did not provide equivalent totals in its report.

Interpretation: Human-rights education, youth and student governance, child-rights protection, peace or values-based education, and community participation are visible in both reporting periods. The 2025 report explicitly adds more detailed documentation of gender inclusion and safe spaces, and physical campus safety through the earthquake drill. The 2024 report explicitly names Cyberbayanihan 3.0 in relation to digital safety and institutional resilience. “Not specifically itemized” means only that the selected source did not clearly identify that theme as a distinct reporting category; it does not establish that no related activity took place.

Selected milestones illustrate the spread of rights education, inclusion, safety, leadership, and peace-building.

Interpretation: The timeline shows that 2025 SDG 16 activity was spread across the year, from child-friendly barangay validation and human-rights training in February to peace-and-unity education in October and the APNIEVE conference in November. This sequence makes the breadth of the portfolio visible: rights education, inclusion, leadership, safety, institutional recognition, and values-based engagement were not confined to one month or one event type. The timeline represents selected documented milestones and is not intended as a complete event register.

How the reported portfolio evolves

The pathway summarizes documented changes in emphasis; it is an interpretation, not a quantitative impact score.

Interpretation: The progression diagram summarizes the principal comparative finding. In 2024, CCCDO documented twelve initiatives distributed across governance, rights, institutional integrity, and youth engagement. In 2025, the human-rights center was supported by capacity-building and recognition, governance participation continued through student government and consultations, and inclusion, safety, and peace education were illustrated through more varied activities. The diagram represents a qualitative interpretation of the documented portfolio and does not assign a numerical score to institutional impact.

Comparative Summary of the Two Reporting Periods

Comparative area	2024 baseline	2025 progress	Interpretation of development
Leadership and governance	Lead-Their-Ship, Ready to Serve, FSDS strategic planning, and the public forum for the first College President.	CSG oath-taking and regular meeting; Mission 626 leadership crash course; voter education and focus-group consultations; preparatory coordination for a proposed barangay leadership course.	The emphasis continues from ethical leadership and consultative selection toward student governance, civic participation, and inter-agency leadership development.

Comparative area	2024 baseline	2025 progress	Interpretation of development
Human rights and justice	COLEGA National Children's Rights Training, CHR-X MOA, and launch of the Center for Human Rights Education.	Human-rights capacity-building workshop for 30 personnel; CHR commendation for CHRE; child-friendly barangay validation.	The 2025 record shows activity around a center established in 2024, with personnel development and institutional recognition.
Youth and civic participation	PYLP 2024, Bagong Pilipinas Youth Forum, Empowering Youth Through Health and Leadership Forum, and student officer training.	Student government meetings, Mission 626, voter education, KUMILOS discussion, teen-center evaluation, and community service through NSTP.	Civic participation continued in more settings, including student representation, community consultation, and youth-oriented assessment.
Institutional integrity and digital resilience	Cyberbayanihan 3.0, National Procurement Summit, and FSDS strategic planning.	Emphasis on accountability, ethics, inclusion, capacity development, safe campus practice, and institutional partnerships.	The 2024 report names digital safety and procurement transparency directly; 2025 expands governance in a more community-facing direction.
Inclusion and protection	Children's rights training and inclusive youth forums.	Take Pride 2025, gender-sensitivity training, child-friendly barangay validation, Indigenous participation and mental-health awareness.	The 2025 account makes inclusion and safety more explicit through specific programs and participation settings.
Peace education and safety	Youth leadership and intercultural dialogue, rights education, and institutional resilience.	UN Celebration on peace and unity, APNIEVE conference, earthquake drill, and supportive student-community initiatives.	The portfolio extends into values-based learning and practical campus preparedness alongside formal governance and rights.

Comparative area	2024 baseline	2025 progress	Interpretation of development
Partnerships and institutional capacity	CHR-X partnership and participation with national and civic institutions in leadership, procurement, and youth programs.	CHR-X, Philippine Commission on Women, DILG/GAD coordination, PAF, community organizations, NSTP networks, and APNIEVE.	The 2025 narrative names a wider range of collaboration channels spanning rights, inclusion, leadership, safety, and education.

Contribution to SDG 16 Targets

CCCDO's documented initiatives align with several SDG 16 target themes. The alignment below describes the relevance of the work to the targets and does not assert that each global indicator was measured by the College.

SDG 16 target	2024 evidence	2025 evidence	SDG 16 relevance
Target 16.3 – Rule of law and access to justice	CHR-X partnership, CHRE launch, COLEGA children's rights training.	CHRE capacity-building workshop and CHR commendation; child-friendly barangay validation.	Rights education and child-protection work make justice concepts more accessible within education and community settings.
Target 16.5 – Reduce corruption and bribery	National Procurement Summit and institutional planning.	Accountability and integrity emphasized in student government, leadership activities, and institutional coordination.	The initiatives frame transparency and responsible use of authority as elements of institutional practice.
Target 16.6 – Effective, accountable, transparent institutions	Public forum for selection of the College President; FSDS strategic planning.	CSG regular meeting, capacity development, public-service collaborations, campus safety coordination.	Governance processes are carried into student representation, training, coordination, and institutional responsibility.
Target 16.7 – Responsive, inclusive, participatory decisions	Student leadership and volunteerism; youth forums; public forum.	Student government, voter education, KUMILOS consultation, child-friendly assessment, Indigenous engagement.	The 2025 record contains additional channels through which student and community perspectives can be represented.

SDG 16 target	2024 evidence	2025 evidence	SDG 16 relevance
Target 16.10 – Public access to information and protection of fundamental freedoms	Cyberbayanihan 3.0 and human-rights education.	Human-rights education, values-based discussion, voter education, inclusive forums.	The two years connect rights and responsible information practices with education, civic awareness, and participation.
Target 16.a – Strengthen institutions to prevent violence and combat crime	CHR-X partnership and Center for Human Rights Education launch.	Rights training, CHRE recognition, child protection, gender sensitivity, safe-space initiatives, and safety preparedness.	The 2025 report shows a more developed set of institutional and educational structures supporting rights, safety, and dignity.

Interpretation of the 2024–2025 Progress

Peace, justice, and strong institutions are built through connected practices rather than a single policy or event. Human-rights education supplies a common language for dignity and fair treatment; participatory governance gives students and community members recognized ways to contribute; leadership development builds the skills needed to manage public responsibilities; and partnerships connect institutional expertise with wider community needs.

The strongest institutional continuity is visible in human-rights education. The 2024 CHR-X agreement and CHRE launch were foundational steps; the 2025 workshop for 30 personnel and the Commission on Human Rights' commendation made the center's work more operational and institutionally visible. This is an important example of how an initiative can develop from formal establishment toward personnel capacity and public recognition.

The second major development is the expansion of inclusion and community participation. The 2024 portfolio strongly emphasized youth leadership and civic empowerment, while the 2025 report identifies student-government meetings, child-friendly governance validation, gender-sensitivity training, Take Pride 2025, voter education, Indigenous-related engagement, and community consultations. These efforts illustrate that inclusive institutions must not only establish rules but also create settings where individuals and groups can participate with dignity.

Third, peace-building became visible through values-based education and practical safety activity. The United Nations Celebration and APNIEVE conference connected peace and ethical conduct with education and dialogue; the earthquake drill connected institutional responsibility with the protection of students, employees, and visitors. Together, these activities show how the values associated with SDG 16 can be reflected in both everyday campus culture and formal public-service relationships.

Taken together, the documented progression is best described as a broadening and institutionalization of CCCDO's SDG 16 contribution. The 2024 portfolio established a balanced foundation of twelve initiatives; the 2025 portfolio developed those themes through training, formal recognition, ongoing student governance, inclusion-focused programs, and wider community and inter-agency collaboration. In higher education, institutional strength is reflected in the fairness of processes, protection of rights, opportunities to participate, and the consistency with which institutions act responsibly.

Conclusion

The 2024 and 2025 reports show CCCDO's sustained contribution to SDG 16 through leadership development, participatory governance, human-rights education, institutional integrity, youth empowerment, inclusion, public-service partnerships, peace education, and campus safety. In 2024, twelve documented initiatives established a broad foundation across rights, leadership, digital resilience, and civic engagement. In 2025, the account became more detailed and institutionally differentiated through CHRE capacity-building and recognition, student-government processes, child-friendly governance, gender-sensitive and LGBTQIA+-inclusive initiatives, voter education, leadership training, community consultation, and peace-and-values education.

The evidence supports a qualitative conclusion that the College's documented approach progressed from a portfolio of governance and rights-related events in 2024 toward more visible institutional mechanisms and more varied community-facing practices in 2025. These developments matter because accountable institutions depend on rights awareness, inclusive participation, transparent processes, responsible leadership, and cooperation between educational institutions and their communities. The report's comparative figures and tables demonstrate the direction of the documented institutional work while preserving the distinction between completed activities and longer-term social outcomes.
